The hard news: writing social science in English has several non-obvious conventions, and these differ across disciplines. In this workshop, we focus on what can be adapted and implemented quickly. This workshop discusses strategies for improving social scientific writing in English.

We will address three ways to improve your writing rapidly:

1.   How to structure and link different parts of an academic paper in English

2.   How to write paragraphs

3.   How to find models for discipline-specific writing conventions.

We will also discuss how to review your writing prior to submission, as well as resources for reference, training and self-study.

There will be ample time to ask questions related to your own writing.
